Know Your Floor

Before you get the mops out, you should decide the kind of floor you have. You initially need to see whether the floor is fixed (and with what), this is on the grounds that a cleaning strategy relies upon the sort of finish you have and not the kind of wood. You can generally ask your ground surface installer, or you can do a little test. Simply rub your finger over the floor; in the event that there is no smear, at that point it is surface-fixed. In the event that a smirch shows up, at that point your hardwood floor has been treated with an infiltrating seal, varnish, polish, oil finish, or shellac and after the treatment, the floor has been waxed. Your floor is stain and water-safe on the off chance that it is fixed with polyacrylic, urethane, or polyurethane. These lustrous floors are very simple to clean, and appropriate clearing and wiping will work.

On account of oil-treated floors, you should work somewhat harder, as the oil finish gets doused into the wood and solidifies it from within. You should clean them cautiously, with fluid wax or glue. You should treat you lacquered, varnished, or shellacked floors like an oil treated floor, as they also are not impervious to water. These floors require occasional waxing and buffing, aside from following explicit cleaning strategies.

Utilize engineered mats at the passage to gather earth and dampness. Make a point to recall that you need to maintain a strategic distance from mats that have glue or grating covered base.
